SCHOOL OF DESIGN—UNIVERSITÉ LAVAL
NO 64,751

THE BDG

The Bachelor degree in Graphic Design at Université Laval provides solid training in graphic design (visit the program description)<sup>1</sup> and, globally, the program aims to develop a strong empathic attitude towards the human issues involved in design. Students are trained to design innovative and effective visual communication projects.

SCHOOL OF DESIGN

The BDG is part of the School of Design, which also offers undergraduate and graduate programs in graphic design, interaction design and design and entrepreneurship. Facilities include state-of-the-art workshops and laboratories within the School of Art.

POSITION DESCRIPTION

- Teaching in undergraduate and graduate levels
- Research/research-creativity, publications and productions, participation at conferences
- Participation in program development
- Participation in the academic and administrative life of the School of Design
- External participation, which includes academic activities that reflect the professor's social commitment

REQUIREMENTS

- Ph. D. completed education in the field of design, supported by education in graphic design as well as recognized work experience in the field of graphic design and supported by professional practice. Otherwise, a master's degree with sustained graphic design practice recognized by peers and accompanied by an international reputation may also be considered by the selection committee.
- Ability to conduct research/research-creation and to obtain research funding in the program's knowledge areas. To this end, peer-recognized publications and research/research-creation will be used to verify research accomplishments. The candidate submitting a non-doctoral application must demonstrate an interest in educational and research development, in particular by obtaining awards or distinctions related to the practice of graphic design, the organization of exhibitions or participation
